Nepal Vs. Bhutan Tourism

Nepal and Bhutan are Southeast Asia's most naturally and culturally blessed countries. Both these small landlocked countries are known to impart absolute peace, harmony, and hospitality to the world. Both Nepal and Bhutan have many excellent destinations for Travellers. However, the nature of tourism is quite different. Let's analyze Nepal vs. Bhutan tourism here.

Tourism in Nepal

The core of tourism in Nepal is the trekking destinations that take you close to the mountain. The Himalayas of Nepal have made the perfect trekking trail that adventure seekers and brave souls worldwide use. It's famous for rather long holidays that demand weeks of a walk. Nepal is renowned as a backpacker's destination, where you can trek around the mountain or travel around the city without government restrictions. You can fly to Kathmandu and start traveling wherever you want (this is the most significant difference between Nepal Vs. Bhutan tourism).

Like Bhutan, you will need a travel visa before entering Nepal. Along with the key, you will need trek permits specific to the Trek areas/ region you travel to. The local government will issue these permits once you start the trek. Only a few routes have been recorded as restricted regions of Nepal, and you need a special license and compulsory travel with the travel agency. Otherwise, there are interfaces of government for traveling in Nepal.

Also, depending on traveling in Nepal depends on dependences and the travel agencies where you book the tour. The average Trekkers spend about $40 per day in Nepal.

Tourism in Bhutan

The core of tourism in Bhutan is its rich Buddhist culture and perfectly built architecture. Century-old architectural Masterpieces and a few Natural wonders have made the perfect sightseeing destinations of Bhutan. Unlike Nepal, Bhutan is somewhat known for a peaceful and luxurious holiday that will relax you completely. Bhutan is partially owned for popular short trips around the city (like the Central Western Bhutan Tour) completed in 3 to 7 days.

The government has placed significant restrictions on tourism in Bhutan. You must book your travel package to Bhutan before applying for the visa. Once your visa is approved, you travel along with the travel agency. The government had strictly set per-day costs and defined the kind of accommodation, food, and transportation the travelers receive during the Bhutan Tour. This means everything is planned and organized even before you get there. Such travel restrictions have made Bhutan one of the most expensive countries in Asia to visit.

Best time to visit Nepal and Bhutan

3 Night 4 days Bhutan tour journey in this Hidden Shangri-la" will be hell adventurous. You can visit Kathmandu and Bhutan throughout the year and book the trek whenever you are free. Experts say Spring and Autumn are the peak season for a visit due to festivals and stable weather. Winter and Monsoon treks have their perks and quitter cities. Traveling in a larger group or during the off-season can be somewhat cheaper.
